The pickers are paid four cents a hundred for the ferns, tied un bundles of 25 each, and some of the experts have at that the ferns, tied in bundles of 25 each crates, some of them going as far west as Denver, Col. Bennington county is the best section of the state for the ndustry, the slopes of the mountains, from which the original growth of evertimber has been removed being new grown up to a forest of hard wood and ferns. Only two varieties are used, the bardy rock and serrated ferns, as they best withstand the hard handling necessary during the picking and shipping. During the past two years, the industry has grown to such an extent that the lumber companies that control the mountain land now lease the picking privileges, instead of permitting free access to the property as formerly. Florists charge $2.50 a thousand for the ferns and make a good profit. A number of firms in Massachusetts and New York give their entire attention to the business, since it has been learned that the ferns will keep in cold storage.
